Thirteen Mississauga citizens will receive prestigious Bicentennial awards for exemplary volunteer work in the community.

The Mississaugans — four women and nine men — are among 1,984 Ontario residents who will receive special gold-plated award medals at ceremonies across the province this fall.

During her trip to Canada this fall, Queen Elizabeth will be presented with a solid gold replica of the volunteers' Bicentennial medal. The official announcement of the award-winners will be made in August.

Nominated by city council to receive the award are: Rev. Maury Blair, Barbara Hammond, Gary Clipperton, Richard Clewes, Claude Racey, Alberto Cataudella, Elias (Louis) Vellanou, A.J. Brands, Jeffery (Ed) Armstrong, Donna Howard, Carole Berry, Harry Hassal Sr., and Lucy Turnbull.

A.J. Brands, of Old Carriage Rd., has been involved in the Mississauga community since immigrating to Canada from Holland in 1956.

Brands has done a wide range of community service, which includes involvement in the political process at all three levels of government, the Boy Scouts, and over five years as a manager and assistant coach in youth soccer according to his nominator, Mayor Hazel McCallion.

He is active in church affairs, and in the Knights of Columbus.
